

There are no
little wanderers
here.

We had some back in 1865. The Civil War had displaced and broken up many families. Homeless kids were wandering the streets. We took them in. But in spite of our quaint name, we're not an orphanage. Never have been. Today we help children with serious emotional and psychological problems. And, like always, we try to help children and families stay together. If you'd like to help our kids, call or write today.

Maybe we should've been called the
Last Chance Hotel.

In spite of our quaint name, this is no Victorian orphanage full of adorable, wide-eyed kids. Never has been. Instead, our kids have serious emotional and psychological problems. Those who don't make some progress with us are often candidates for less-caring institutions, prison, the street or worse yet, suicide. If you'd like to help our kids, please call or write today.
